

Grad 603: Graduate Student Teaching Practicum

Graduate School

This course is designed to provide graduate students with opportunities to apply instructional best practices within their discipline through applying pedagogical practice, theory, and principles to develop lesson plans, lead instructional activities, and evaluate mastery of material. Course enrollment is restricted to fully admitted degree-seeking graduate students. Individual sections may include additional restrictions. Regardless of section, the course requires demonstration of content knowledge within the discipline in which the graduate student will provide instruction. Course objectives will be met through supervised teaching experiences, teaching observations, supervised student formative evaluation, and supervisory meetings with course instructor. Specific sections can focus on the instruction of specific undergraduate courses within the discipline in which the graduate student is gaining experience with instruction.

3 Credits

Instruction Type(s)

- Pract/Intern: Practicum/Internship for Grad 603

Subject Areas

- Education, Other

