

Anth 105: Introduction to Environment and Society

Sociology & Anthropology

This course focuses on the complex relationships between people and the environment from a social science perspective. It provides an introduction to the ways in which humans interact with, depend on, and shape their environments by looking at current environmental issues, such as climate change, biodiversity conservation, and energy transitions.

3 Credits

Cross-listed Courses

- Geog 105: Introduction to Environment and Society

Instruction Type(s)

- Lecture: Lecture for Anth 105

Subject Areas

- Anthropology

Related Areas

- Physical and Biological Anthropology

